TUBEX EscaWrap

Tubex EscaWrap – protecting cut-back root stocks.

Die-back diseases such as Esca and Eutypa are, unfortunately, devastating vine crops across the world, with the only really effective method of control being to cut the vine right back, often to just above the root stock, in order to remove diseased wood.

Careful management can ensure cropping relatively quickly after the cut-back process, but the vine plant needs specialist protection during this convalescent stage.

Chemical or mechanical weed control, plus browsing/burrowing animals present threats to the recovering vine that Tubex's new EscaWrap has been designed to combat, enabling regular vineyard maintenance operations to continue while cut-back vines recuperate.

Tubex EscaWrap is 50cm high to prevent accidental herbicide spray drift, and has a large diameter (130mm) in order to fit over the root stock. It is split vertically for ease of installation and removal, and is designed to last a minimum of 3-5 years.

*EscaWrap longevity is dependent on site and weather conditions but is typically around 3-5 years
